Soaring commodity price, possible threat of stagflation, rising operating cost, decreasing business profit, political instability in the region... All these seem to be too much for business leaders to bear. In the name of survival, many companies start cutting their investment in Learning and Development (L&D). They do not realize the strategic contribution of L&D on companies' future growth.

However, this is when successful companies shift into higher gear with more investment in L&D. Learning must be anchored as one of the critical building blocks for companies to weather through rough water. The individual leading this function, the Chief Learning Officer (CLO), is in a unique position to add significant value to the organization, especially during gloomy economy.

Against this backdrop, 3rd Annual Learning World 2009 will bring together Learning and Development Leaders and People Leaders across the globe to discuss best practices in L&D, addressing the emerging, pressing challenges and bring ever-lasting changes to the organization. Learning professionals will meet and hear winning tactics and views from some of the world's most successful L&D practitioners on how they contribute strategically to the organization's future growth and survival. Tap into the knowledge and experience of experts across industries to discover the most efficient and effective solution for your organization and stakeholders.
